HEALTHY NORTH COAST

ANNUAL REPORT 2025-26

NURTURING INNOVATION

Acknowledgement of Country

Healthy North Coast acknowledges the Traditional Custodians of the lands across our region, which includes the Githabul, Bundjalung, Yaegl, Gumbaynggirr, Dunghutti and Birpai Nations. We pay our respect to Elders past, present and those on their journey. We recognise these lands were never ceded and acknowledge the continuation of culture and connection to the land, sky and sea. We acknowledge Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples as Australia's First Peoples and honour the rich diversity of the world's oldest living culture.

About us

Healthy North Coast is a not-for-profit organisation pursuing our vision of 'Healthy people in North Coast communities'

We're one of 31 Primary Health Networks (PHNs) funded by the Australian Government. From the Camden Haven in the south to Tweed Heads in the north, we work to streamline health services, particularly for those at risk of poor health outcomes, and to better coordinate care so people receive the right care, in the right place, at the right time.

Our 2023-2030 Strategic Plan highlights the initiatives and outcomes that focus our delivery on four areas of impact: Excellence, Equity, Sustainability and People.

As a PHN we deliver 3 core functions:

Coordinate and integrate local health care services in partnership with Local Hospital Districts, NSW Health and Aboriginal Community Controlled Health Organisations to improve the quality and experience of care, and efficient use of resources.

Commission primary health care and mental health services to address population health needs and gaps in service delivery, to improve access and equity.

Capacity-build, collaborate and provide support to general practice, pharmacy, allied health and mental health providers to support quality care delivery.

Innovation, Equity and Partnerships Driving Better Health Outcomes

Innovation for Healthy North Coast is about excellence, equity and finding better and more sustainable ways to improve health outcomes for our communities. This is particularly important in a region characterised by high and diverse health needs, geographic challenges and finite resources.

Throughout the past year, we've continued to embrace innovation as a critical enabler of our vision to deliver better health outcomes for all North Coast communities.

Our work has increasingly been guided by evidence, data and a deeper understanding of community needs. Through strengthened health needs assessments, enhanced monitoring and evaluation processes, and a continued focus on commissioning effective services, we are ensuring that our investments deliver meaningful outcomes for the people who need them most.

Partnerships and people remain at the heart of our success, and we continue to work closely with our two Local Health Districts, Aboriginal health partners and a broad network of healthcare organisations to strengthen coordination and create integrated approaches to care.

This year, we were pleased to welcome six new member organisations including RACGP, APNA, SARRAH, ACON, Lifebridge and the Pharmaceutical Society of Australia, further expanding the expertise and perspectives that help shape our strategic direction.

We are also laying the foundations for future innovation. National health reforms and advances in digital health are creating new opportunities to improve information sharing, strengthening service delivery and support for clinicians and communities. We're actively exploring the safe and responsible use of emerging technologies, including artificial intelligence, while establishing the governance and safeguards needed to support their adoption.

Importantly, this year saw the re-introduction of our Excellence Awards, recognising the outstanding contributions of primary healthcare professionals across the region and celebrating the innovation that continues to drive positive change.

On behalf of the Board, I thank our staff, partners and providers for your commitment, collaboration and shared vision as we continue working together to build a healthier future for our North Coast communities.

Message from the CEO

MONIKA WHEELER

2025-26 was a year of action and impact

In the last year we strengthened access to primary healthcare services across our region, supported workforce development initiatives, delivered $67 million in services and programs, and continued to respond to emerging community needs. Our focus was continuing to work with providers to improve service quality, supporting general practices and primary care teams to navigate change, building stronger partnerships with the Local Health Districts and the Aboriginal Community Controlled Health Organisations and investing in initiatives that help deliver more coordinated and person-centred care bringing to life our value of 'Nurturing Innovation'.

This year was also one of organisational maturity. We enhanced our internal systems and processes (moving confidently towards becoming a high performing team), strengthened our approach to quality improvement and performance monitoring and refined our governance alongside best practice standards (including maintaining our ISO 9001 certification and gaining ISO 27001). These improvements help ensure that Healthy North Coast remains responsive, accountable and well positioned to deliver value to our communities and the Australian Government, our primary funder.

At the heart of every achievement are the people who make our work possible. I am continually inspired by the expertise, compassion and professionalism of our staff, who while they might be small in numbers are mighty in talent and capability. I am also very pleased that 89% of them said that Healthy North Coast is a great place to work in our culture survey.

I invite you to gain a better understanding of the breadth of work delivered throughout the year and the collective effort behind it. Thank you to everyone in our region who has contributed to improving health outcomes for our communities and walking the talk of our 'Nurturing Innovation' value. Together, we continue to build a stronger, more responsive and more connected health system for the North Coast.

Our innovation focus driving meaningful impact

Adopting an innovation mindset is essential to the future of quality, accessible, and equitable primary health care

As our population ages and the prevalence of chronic disease, mental ill-health and complex health needs continue to grow, traditional models of care alone are no longer enough. Communities expect health services that are more connected, accessible and person-centred, while health professionals need new ways of working that reduce fragmentation and improve outcomes. Innovation enables the health system to respond to these changing needs by testing new approaches, embracing technology, strengthening partnerships and designing services around the people who use them.

As the Primary Health Network for the North Coast of NSW, we play a critical role in driving innovation across our region. Working closely with primary care providers, our two Local Health Districts, Aboriginal Community Controlled Health Organisations, community organisations and consumers, we identify local challenges and develop solutions tailored to the unique needs of our many diverse communities.

A key example is our commitment to place-based reform - an innovative approach that recognises there is no one-size-fits-all solution to improving health. By empowering communities to identify their own priorities and co-design responses with them, place-based reform delivers programs that reflect local strengths, cultures and challenges. This creates more sustainable and meaningful improvements in local health and wellbeing.

The following are examples from the past year of how we're embracing innovation to drive meaningful impact.

Recognising and building our local workforce to deliver high quality care

Health Through Ages and Stages Conference

In May 2026, we once again brought together primary health professionals from across the North Coast for our Health Through Ages and Stages Conference - a one-day education event focused on delivering high-quality, evidence-based care across every stage of life.

Through expert-led presentations, practical workshops and tailored learning streams covering preventative care, clinical updates, digital health and AI, 150 participants gained new knowledge, strengthened local connections and explored innovative models of care. The conference reinforced our commitment to supporting a skilled, connected primary health workforce that can respond to the evolving health needs of North Coast communities.

"Fantastic day - very engaging and extremely well run. Thank you HNC!"

- Allied Health attendee

2025 Primary Health Care Excellence Awards

In late 2025 we celebrated the outstanding individuals and organisations who go above and beyond in strengthening health care across the North Coast.

Held for the first time since 2017, the awards attracted 57 nominations across 9 categories and recognised excellence in innovation, leadership, nursing, general practice, mental health, pharmacy, allied health and Aboriginal health.

The event also honoured long-serving health professionals in the region and paid tribute to respected Alstonville GP Dr Michael Davis. By recognising innovation, collaboration and dedication, the awards highlighted the vital role of the region's primary care workforce in delivering high-quality, person-centred care and inspiring the next generation of health professionals.

"I feel very lucky. I have an excellent team, so I feel like that makes my job very easy. And to be given an award named after Mike [Davis] is very, very humbling."

- Dr Monica Taylor, winner of the Dr Michael Davis Award for Excellence in General Practice Leadership

Improving the design and delivery of mental health services to better meet community needs

Medicare Mental Health Phone Service National Campaign

Healthy North Coast, in partnership with Country to Coast (PHN for Central Queensland, Wide Bay and Sunshine Coast), demonstrated national leadership by delivering the national media campaign to promote the Medicare Mental Health Phone Service to the community.

The national awareness campaign delivered exceptional results, reaching more than 8.5 million Australians, generating 32 million impressions and 227,000 clicks across display, native, demand gen and search advertising. This was a significant over-delivery in terms of forecasted impressions and clicks.

Campaign activity generated 236,000 active web users and 255,000 web sessions. The campaign also generated 12,000 directly measurable actions, including 2,392 trackable call starts to the Medicare Mental Health phone number, 1,915 phone contact saves, 7,174 quiz completions and 523 mental health resource downloads.

Overall, the campaign provided a practical foundation for future national PHN-led communications, demonstrating how PHN local knowledge can support awareness of key health services, understanding and action.

Creative therapies pilot supports mental health on the North Coast

Launched in May 2026, we were only 1 of 3 PHNs in the country to roll out the Creative Therapies Pilot, allowing people experiencing moderate to severe mental health challenges to have access to new free creative therapy services, accessed through the Medicare Mental Health Phone Service.

Creative therapies offered through the program are delivered by 15 qualified practitioners accredited through the Australian, New Zealand and Asian Creative Arts Therapies Association (ANZACATA) or the Australian Music Therapy Association (AMTA).

The program has been immensely popular, helping people to engage with their mental health in new and meaningful ways.

> "It kind of takes the thinking out of it, and it just helps me to feel the emotions."

Providing support to general practice and encouraging innovation in patient care

Sustainability and Viability Initiative (SAVI)

SAVI is helping strengthen the future of primary care across the North Coast by supporting general practices and Aboriginal Community Controlled Health Organisations to better understand and improve their sustainability.

Designed originally by the Hunter New England Central Coast PHN, the initiative provides a confidential assessment of three key areas: workforce, operations and finance. Participating practices receive tailored benchmarking reports, practical insights and ongoing support to identify opportunities for improvement, build capability and plan for the future. By helping practices understand what is working well and where support is needed, SAVI aims to create a stronger, more resilient primary care system for communities across the region.

121 North Coast general practices are participating in SAVI.

This represents 66% of general practices in the region.

North Coast general practices lead the nation in nurse-led care

We are leading the nation in nurse-led care, with 13 of the 38 general practices selected nationally for the Australian Primary Health Care Nurses Association's (APNA) Building Nurse Capacity program located on the North Coast.

Each practice received $12,000 to establish nurse-led clinics focused on cardiovascular health, diabetes, cancer prevention, healthy ageing or mental health. After 18 months, the clinics are improving access to care, supporting better patient outcomes and strengthening the primary care workforce.

The initiative demonstrates how nurses working to their full scope can reduce pressure on GPs while delivering innovative, sustainable models of care tailored to local community needs.

Stephen Duns, former CEO of APNA, was in Coffs Harbour in November to see Kayley Meredith's Healthy Ageing Clinic at Coffs Medical Centre. Her clinic saw over 900 patients and provided essential care to the local ageing population.

> "It's time that we embrace innovation and expand the adoption of nurse-delivered team based models of care – if we break down barriers, we know that nurses can do more for the health of their communities"
>
> - Stephen Duns, former CEO of APNA
>
> "Nurses are at the forefront, delivering holistic care that extends beyond traditional general practice, and [our] clinic's success demonstrates that innovative, nurse-led models can both meet urgent community health needs and ensure long-term financial sustainability."
>
> - Kayley Meredith, Chronic Disease Coordinator at Coffs Medical Centre.

Partnerships that strengthen the local and national health workforce

Hosting the International Foundation for Integrated Care's Australia Hub

In May, we announced that we are partnering with the International Foundation for Integrated Care (IFIC) to host IFIC Australia. This creates a platform for shared learning, innovation and collaboration to strengthen person-centred, integrated care across Australia.

The partnership brings together global expertise and local leadership through our Centre for Healthcare Knowledge & Innovation, supporting health professionals, service providers and system leaders to build capability and improve care.

Through learning programs, mentoring, resources and international connections, IFIC Australia will help translate evidence and ideas into practical improvements, supporting a more connected, coordinated and community-focused health system.

> By working with IFIC, we are bringing world-leading knowledge and capability directly to our region and the broader Australian sector."
>
> - Monika Wheeler, CEO Healthy North Coast.

Our Patients Together

Innovation is not just about new technology, it can also be about finding better ways for people to work together to improve outcomes. The Our Patients Together series is an example of innovation through collaboration, connecting GPs, primary care providers and Local Health District (LHD) hospital specialists to improve integrated patient care, coordinate referrals, and streamline local health services.

Over the past year, we've run Our Patients Together workshops twice each in Lismore and Tweed Heads, with 36 general practitioners and 70 other primary care workers participating.

These are practical examples of how our Memorandum of Understanding with the Northern NSW and Mid North Coast Local Health Districts is bringing primary and acute care clinicians together as one system to improve patient care.

> We don't ever get this kind of information, so valuable, so worth staying until 8:30pm."
>
> - Our Patients Together attendee.

Enhancing access to high-quality primary health care for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples

Strengthening social and emotional wellbeing

Between July and December 2025, our Aboriginal Health Partnership strengthened social and emotional wellbeing (SEWB) through culturally safe mental health, alcohol and other drug, and suicide prevention programs.

Delivered through trusted Aboriginal Community Controlled Health Organisations, the programs provide outreach, home visits, family-centred care and practical support.

More than 1,600 Aboriginal community members received support through 8,000 appointments, with 70% of clients completing follow-up assessments reporting improved wellbeing.

Our Health Needs Assessment 2025–2028 identified SEWB as a priority, reinforcing the importance of culturally grounded care in improving health and wellbeing outcomes.

> "Many people present with multiple, overlapping needs that require sustained, culturally safe engagement rather than short term intervention."
>
> - SEWB staff member

Working together to improve Aboriginal health across the North Coast

The Aboriginal Health Partnership provides a platform for shared decision-making between Healthy North Coast and Aboriginal Community Controlled Health Organisations. Together, partners oversee a portfolio valued at almost $10 million, supporting 16 regional initiatives across social and emotional wellbeing, Integrated Team Care, access to care, cancer outcomes, workforce development and system reform.

The Partnership brings together 9 Aboriginal Medical Service sites across 12 local government areas, employing more than 400 Aboriginal staff. Approximately 33,000 Aboriginal people have the opportunity to access services. Through collective governance and joint investment decisions, the Partnership continues to strengthen Aboriginal leadership in regional health planning and commissioning.

> "Through the ongoing relationship with Healthy North Coast, the service is being able to influence where funding is best positioned for Aboriginal health... They're all having really good results."
>
> - Payden Samuelsson, CEO Bullinah Aboriginal Health Service

Greater access to health services for those in need

New GP services to support those experiencing homelessness

We partnered with local homelessness organisations to launch new GP and nursing services for people experiencing homelessness in Tweed Heads, Byron Bay, Mullumbimby and Coffs Harbour.

This initiative is in response to the 2025 NSW Statewide Street Count, in which the Byron Shire (291) recorded the highest number of people sleeping rough outside of Sydney CBD. Tweed Valley (155) and Coffs Harbour (99) were the next highest. Services are delivered in trusted community spaces, improving access to primary care, chronic disease management, mental health support and referrals.

The $540k program reduces barriers to health care, improves health outcomes and provides coordinated, person-centred care for some of the North Coast's most vulnerable community members.

> "Everyone deserves access to quality health care, no matter their circumstances. People experiencing homelessness face significant barriers to medical support, which can lead to untreated conditions and serious health complications. By bringing GP services directly to them, we're breaking down those barriers and ensuring they receive the care they need with dignity and compassion."

Outreach clinic established at Stuarts Point

We partnered with Macksville Medical Centre to help establish the new Point Care outreach clinic at Stuarts Point, improving access to primary care for a community that has long struggled to access local GP services.

Operating every Tuesday from 9am to 12pm, the clinic provides GP consultations, chronic disease management, mental health care, care plans, scripts and referrals - bringing health care closer to home for Stuarts Point residents and reducing the need to travel to Macksville or Kempsey for routine medical care.

> "We are really excited to be bringing high-quality, patient focused care to the Stuarts Point community,"
>
> - Macksville Medical Centre Practice Manager Casey Shorter.

Community-led, place-based initiatives that support communities to build connection and resilience

Stronger Together program unites young and old

Stronger Together is a $147,000 intergenerational wellbeing initiative delivered by RSL LifeCare, part of our Community Wellbeing and Resilience program. In May-June 2026, the program brought together students from Byron Bay High School and Emmanuel Anglican College with older residents at Bayside @ Byron Retirement Village and Kokoda Village Ballina for free weekly activities like digital skills sharing sessions and mini Olympics. Around 20 participants attended each session, with the program expected to engage up to 160 people as it expands to Lismore later in the year.

The initiative is reporting reduced loneliness among older people and improved empathy, confidence and school engagement among young people.

Men's Table sessions creating connection across the North Coast

We expanded Men's Table groups across the North Coast as part of our Targeted Regional Initiatives for Suicide Prevention (TRISP). This initiative creates safe spaces where men meet regularly over dinner to build trusted friendships, reduce isolation and support one another.

It forms part of a $1.15 million investment in five community-led suicide prevention programs delivered throughout 2025-26, including 77 free suicide prevention training sessions delivered by Lifeline that reached more than 1,000 participants, and school-based programs delivered by Batyr to build mental health and resilience in young people.

Improving quality of life for those in their older years

Telehealth in residential aged care

Innovation in telehealth is transforming care for people living in residential aged care on the North Coast by bringing specialist advice and clinical support closer to residents, reducing barriers caused by distance, mobility challenges and workforce shortages, particularly for those in remote communities.

We led the rollout of a Residential Aged Care Virtual Care project that provides telehealth equipment, training and ongoing support to residential aged care homes across the North Coast.

78% of eligible aged care homes in the region have joined the program, with 11 facilities adopting advanced Visionflex Telehealth Carts for remote clinical assessments. The initiative is helping reduce unnecessary hospital transfers and emergency department presentations while supporting more timely access to GPs, specialists and allied health services for older people.

> "For our residents, it's really improved their access to health services and ultimately improved their overall health outcomes."

Trialling the future of community connection with AI

We're developing an innovative AI-powered Community Wayfinding Assistant to help people more easily find and connect with local services, community groups and activities that support their health and wellbeing.

Designed to support efforts in social prescribing and healthy ageing, the tool will provide personalised guidance based on people's needs, interests and circumstances. We're currently working with the tech provider Today Strategic Designs and community members to test and refine the tool, ensuring it is accessible, inclusive and meets the needs of people across the North Coast - including older people, people from diverse cultural backgrounds and those with different access needs.

We're excited to launch this tool to the wider community in 2026-27.
